CANADA TRADE WITH BRITAIN

The good work done by the Lumber Commission in fostering trade between Canada and the United Kingdom has been the most powerful claim upon the gratitude of the people of the latter country. For many years the Canadian lumbermen have been pestered about "strangling" the commerce of Great Britain, and they have neglected all the many opportunities for reciprocal trade and mutual benefit. The story partly was in the hands of the manufacturers and partly in the hands of the merchants, and any attempt to foster the introduction of British goods into Canada has been met with the objection that the latter industries of the Dominion were to be endangered.

In a short time years Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his ministers have been able to begin a new feeling in England towards Canada that Sir John Macdonald or his successors ever manifested. Why? Because the Laurier government has been able to give proof of its sincerity in its policy of extending a preference to goods from the United Kingdom, and in the volume of trade between the two countries.

Canada stands to gain much because of the good work of the latter government in its policy of reciprocity. It has been by the policy of the latter government that the Canadian people have been able to secure a more liberal market for Canadian goods than they have ever before enjoyed. If the quality can be made equal to the goods furnished by other countries, the Canadian goods will give the preference by English dealers. The Canadian goods will be able to compete on equal terms with the goods of other countries for the reason that the latter are not able to compete on equal terms with the goods of the Dominion government in building every possible aid to the Canadian shippers, with remarkable results. The following lists, recently published by the Dominion government, will show the position of the Canadian goods in the market. The following lists, recently published by the Dominion government, will show the position of the Canadian goods in the market.

The first Canadian Contingent to South Africa has won imperishable renown as an important and always ready part of the famous brigade which, under command of Gen. Smuts, is familiarly known in South Africa as the "Fighting Ninteenth." The brigade is composed of the famous Gordons, the Shropshires, the Cornwalls, and the Royal Canadians. The record of the brigade, as officially published in orders a short time ago, was somewhat meagre for all Canadian
